

Architectural renderings usually embellish the scale and perspective of a planned building, and the final result, the actual building, is not as fanciful most times--that's why we love them! But here the building turned out as humongous as the artist had imagined it in the rendering. The angle and size are so similar, one would almost be tempted to think the painting was done FROM the postcard photo, but the difference in the sign and other details supports my belief that the painting is a pre-build artist's conception, executed by the architect's office for the client. Wonder who has the original...

[This Message was edited by: bigbrotiki 2010-08-14 00:09]

profile psnl msg homepg edit quote

bigbrotiki
Tiki Socialite

Posted: 11 days ago; 12:31 am

Joined: Mar 25,
2002
Posts: 7809
From: Tiki
Island, above

I wanted to ad this piece that recently sold on e-bay to this encyclopedic thread: